Deceit and Dishonesty Are all-Natural and Essential 1.8KSharesFacebook30Shares Deceitful Manipulation Deceitful Manipulation More often than not, most people have a desire to be part of a crowd and to conform to what most people do or see. After all, most people conform to what they see in the society, in public events, and on television, movies, and books. To put it more plainly, people who have a good social life tend to converse and communicate with others in a similar manner. Deceitful manipulation is also used by political professionals and those in power to gain and maintain their positions in the society. They use deceitful manipulation to gain the support of the masses and then betray them. This kind of manipulation is often a prerequisite to those seeking to gain control. Those who are very manipulative often have good intentions and they have selfish interests in mind. However, while most people want to be included, they also want to be self-sufficient and independent from others. They desire to be their own person and to not care about what others think. They desire to be their own people and to be respected by others. This is why they want to have a good relationship and to communicate with others in a truthful manner. One of the main goals in life is to achieve happiness and contentment. It is not easy to do so in the existing materialistic societies where everybody is out for themselves and where keeping secrets is an essential part of life. In this regard, people generally desire that their achievements and ideals not be stolen by others or kept secret. This is why they follow honesty and have many secrets to keep. The example of Obama and the other politicians in the U.S. are a good example of this. Obama is very clever in deceiving and manipulating people to his advantage. He, by no means, is the only politician in this regard. After all, if it were easy for someone to become a politician, then everybody would do it. Nevertheless, due to his political ability to deceive and to manipulate people to his advantage, Obama is very powerful and is among the most influential people in the U.S. As people are now seeing, Obama is not doing well economically, as he has promised to the voters, but he lives a very comfortable life as the most powerful man in the U.S. He

The weekend before the Philadelphia Flyers' home opener in 2016-17, defenseman Shayne Gostisbehere was making the rounds with his new teammates in the locker room, sharing his rookie experience with the veterans. He sat down in front of goalie Steve Mason and said something that would mark the start of a new friendship for the two star players on the team. "I told him, 'Man, I've been dreaming about this my whole life,'" Gostisbehere recalled this week. "I remember just talking to Steve about my excitement to be here and just sharing about the differences in lifestyle that I've been exposed to as a junior player. It was really cool. And the best part is we keep talking about it a little bit." Now that Gostisbehere has had a season to think about it, he's thankful he has Mason and his other buddy, captain Claude Giroux, to talk to about the transition from Canada to North America and the adjustment to the North American style of hockey. Giroux has been a face of Flyers transition to a team defined more by its defense than goals. Gostisbehere has already been through the ringer in his first season in the NHL, so it's not surprising the two have found a way to communicate. "I'll call him when I have new information, when I get tired of listening to this stuff," Gostisbehere said. "He's a guy that's great to talk to. We have a lot of fun together." Forward Michael Raffl, who was a member of the Flyers' 2016 training camp, has already established a comfort level. "He's like my brother," Raffl said of Giroux, the Flyers' current captain. "He's a guy I really have my head on. So it's been a cool season, and I've been really enjoying it with him." G f678ea9f9e
